A Volume in the Elsevier Global Energy Policy and Economics Series

Edited by:

Menlo Energy Economics, San Francisco, USA

Wolfgang Pfaffenberger

International University, Bremen, Germany

KEY FEATURES:

- First book to cover electricity market reform on a worldwide scale
- Includes contributions on key markets from experts around the world

This book examines the most important competitive electricity markets around the world and provides definitive answers as to why some markets have performed admirably while others have failed, often with dire financial and cost consequences. It also looks at what can be drawn from these experiences to design future market reforms. The lessons contained within have direct relevance to regulators, policy makers, the investment community, industry, academics and graduate students of electricity markets worldwide.

"Many books and papers have analyzed experience in individual countries, especially the UK and US. There have been some comparative studies within wider geographical areas, such as Europe. But the present volume is perhaps the first - certainly the most extensive and up-to-date - systematic comparison of experience on a world-wide basis with the aim of identifying what works and what does not and why."
